Family,

Tropical Storm Helene may impact travel plans so keep an eye out.

Love,

GOP

Dear Jamie,

This is a courtesy notification to inform you that your NetJets Meteorology Team expects a storm system in the western Caribbean Sea to cause limited to no travel for the entirety of Thursday, Sept. 26, along the Gulf Coast and Panhandle areas of Florida.

The system is expected to strengthen into Tropical Storm Helene by Tuesday and potentially into a hurricane by Wednesday.

While the storm will have an indirect impact on surrounding areas, widespread thunderstorms on Thursday along the Atlantic coast of Florida could cause significant Air Traffic Control delays. Additionally, heavy rain and scattered thunderstorms on Friday could restrict flights in South Georgia and the Carolinas.

As the storm moves inland on Friday, heavy rain and scattered thunderstorms will subside across Florida, and flight activity should return to normal once safe conditions can be verified. We will share updates on the Owner Portal as necessary.

Please understand that as extreme weather conditions impact commercial airlines, NetJets operations can consequently be compromised because Crewmembers rely on these carriers to travel where they are needed.

We are here to assist with your travel needs, as we realize this may cause some uncertainty for you. Please reply to this email or reach out to us using your dedicated phone number below.

Sincerely,
NetJets Owner Services Team 6
